What Does It Mean When You Die Three Times?

Waking Lazarus by T.L. Hines

Minneapolis, MN—When he was five years old, Tony L. Hines, nearly drowned while ice fishing with his uncle in Montana. Thirty years later, this memory became the inspiration for the opening scene of Waking Lazarus. He also worked in college as a janitor cleaning cadaver storage rooms. These two experiences converged in his mind. What if there was a man who struggled with recurring Near Death Experiences? What kind of person would he be?

Waking Lazarus revolves around Jude Allman—a man who has died (and come back to life) three times. Frustrated and frightened by a life in the public eye and a past he doesn't understand, he retreats into hiding, escaping into the vastness of Montana. But like Jude, the past won't stay buried.

At the same time, prowling evil circles his adopted hometown of Red Lodge, Montana as children are mysteriously disappearing. And the key to solving these missing-children crimes may lie within the mysteries of Jude's deaths. Now he has to face his past to save his own life—and the lives of those he loves.

Tony maintains an active blog at tlhines.com where, among other things, he has started a unique grassroots marketing campaign which includes over 180 volunteer publicists. These publicists have the chance to win unique prizes including: an iPod Nano, a share of his author royalties, and a role in his next novel.
